

NEVER MIND THE KURDS; LET'S LOOK AFTER THE BRITS!

SINCE becoming Prime Minister towards the end of last year, John Major has thrown himself into a flurry of the most intensive activity in trying to sort out the problems of the Middle East. First, he played a very high-profile role in the Gulf War — in which Britain had no interest whatsoever and of which she should have kept out. More lately, he has been running round like a busy bee trying to organise relief to the Kurdish refugees who have been attempting to get out of Iraq. Scarcely a news bulletin passes without a report on what Mr. Major has been doing to help the Kurds. But while all this has been happening what has Mr. Major actually done to grapple with the problems of Britain? From all accounts, almost nothing!

As 1991 gets into its stride, Britain plunges into ever-deeper internal crisis. Unemployment has again topped the 2 million mark. Our balance of payments is worse than ever. Bankruptcies of British companies are breaking records. Crime is going through the roof. Vital public services, such as Health, Education and Transport, are breaking down — at least in part due to inadequate funding. Huge numbers of our people, particularly the old, are poorly cared for. And while all this is going on we still have a war on our own doorstep, in Northern Ireland, which has not yet been won — after 23 years of conflict, a war which should demand the attention of our armed forces as first priority.

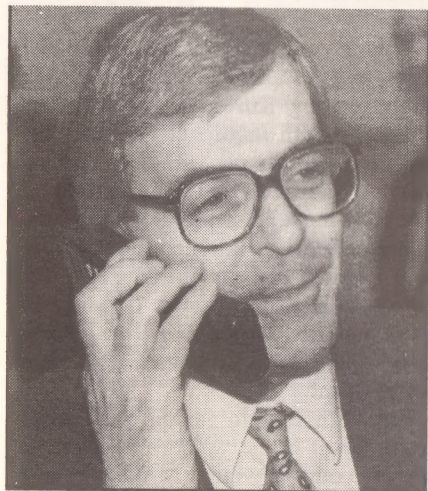

Yet in the face of these enormous problems at home we have seen no sign of action or decisiveness on

His answers to Walden's questions indicated where his mind was at the time. When the interviewer suggested that his record was not as good as that of his predecessor, Mrs. Thatcher, Major was stung into this indignant reply:-

WAR PROPAGANDA

JUST NOW our Government is moving to embroil us anew in the Middle East. Some of the issues involved in all this are discussed in detail elsewhere.

But just as important are the methods being used to bring this all about.

Former Liberal leader Mr. David Steel claims that in sending our troops out to Iraq on behalf of the Kurds our Government is acting in response to 'public opinion'. But in fact it is doing no such thing.

What the Government is doing is responding to screaming hysteria on the Kurdish issue which is quite obviously being orchestrated in our newspapers and on our television screens.

And the decision was made quite independently of what the man in the street was likely to have thought about the idea. Also, we can be sure that decision was made with little regard for the sufferings of the Kurds, which were merely seized upon as a convenient pretext for war.

What we are looking at is propaganda — employing a number of tricks of a kind used repeatedly in modern times to get wars going, to keep them going and to inflame whole nations with hatred and a desire for revenge against whatever nation is currently the target of the propagandists.

As the first part of this, there is the attempt to create tunnel vision in the masses. The masses have to be made to forget all the sufferings in the world except for those, whether real or alleged, inflicted by the 'enemy' of the moment.

Next, the masses have to be stirred up by rumour-mongering about the current bogey-man's 'atrocities', which have to be made as lurid and sensational as possible. All this is the stock-in-trade of today's war propagandist. This type of propaganda is still at full blast against Saddam Hussein right now, much as it has been since last July, when he occupied Kuwait.

Two things should be noted. First, the propagandists are not overly concerned about the truth. Remember the story about Kuwaiti babies being pulled from incubators? This has now turned out to be utterly unfounded.

Earlier examples go back to the American Civil War, when the South was alleged to be doing all sorts of things to its negro slaves. In World War I the British Government and press put about rumours that Germans were cutting off the hands of Belgian children. Some time after the war ended Britain admitted that these tales had been completely untrue. Finally, in World War II the story of what is now known as the 'holocaust' was concocted. After much scientific scrutiny by a number of distinguished historians of many nations, this too is now widely recognised as baseless.

Secondly, pure emotive propaganda is often useful as a smoke-screen for the REAL reasons why a war is being fought — especially when it is against the interests of the nation fighting it. We still have not been officially told what British interest was involved in Kuwait.

In the real world, no government ever gets involved in any conflict out of bleeding-heart concern for remote human suffering. The recent one, and its possible continuation, are no exceptions.

So be warned!

GET BRITAIN OUT OF THE MIDDLE EAST!

RIGHT FROM THE START, British Nationalist was against the participation of Britain in the Gulf War. No British interest was involved in the conflict. We said from the outset that Iraq's invasion of Kuwait was properly speaking an Arab matter, to be sorted out among Arabs themselves. We also believed that, as far as the Gulf Region itself was concerned, war would breed nothing but chaos — and it has.

When war finally did break out, we took the view that once our troops had finished the business in which they had been embroiled every one of them should be brought home straightaway, and for good. In this way the original error — to use no stronger term — of their misplaced commitment by the politicians to this foreign brawl could be rectified.

But now it seems that the process of our forces' withdrawal is to be reversed. It seems that they are to be recommitted in the Middle East — this time in a way that will be uncertain both as to its character and its duration, and may turn out to be a back door to a new and much messier war in the region.

MAJOR'S MISCHIEF

Prime Minister John Major has been publicly preening himself ever since supposedly selling the Americans the idea of crashing into Iraq to set up so-called 'safe havens' for Kurdish and possibly other refugees fleeing from Saddam Hussein, havens to be established and run by British, American and other western forces.

To swallow the razzmatazz of the Tory tabloids, eager just now to counter the image of Britain's Premier as wobbling and indecisive, anyone would think that this was some great diplomatic coup on John Major's part about which we should be pleased and proud.

LADY BOUNTIFUL

Meanwhile, of course, Presidents George Bush of the United States and François Mitterand of France have also been trying to claim paternity of the plan, to the plaudits of similar media claquees in their own countries. But despite the catty, prima-donna eye-scratching contest between the three would-be 'great statesmen' for the number-one spot in the attribution of the credits, it is hard to see why any ordinary Briton, American or Frenchman should think the dispatch of his country's servicemen to Iraq any cause for celebration.

Major, Bush, Mitterand and their sidekicks may give assurances that the whole operation will be limited and temporary. But the truth is that Iraq's internal tribal feuds have been going on for generations. The recent Gulf War has caused these to flare up more acutely than ever before — especially since George Bush encouraged the country's Shi'ites and Kurds to rebel following the ceasefire. These feuds do not seem likely to end in the near future. Moreover, the longer our forces are in Iraq the more likely it is that new armed clashes will come about between them and the Iraqis, however much our politicians talk about 'limiting' the purposes of their presence. In any case, the 'haven' scheme can only serve to give new aid and comfort to the Kurdish rebels, keeping the turmoil going. In the outcome, our troops could well find themselves increasingly sucked into a quagmire of alien conflicts — perhaps for years to come. This is precisely what happened to the Americans in Vietnam.

HUMBUG FROM MAJOR

Nor can the reasons given by Major & Co. for this involvement stand up to ten seconds' scrutiny.

The whole operation has been masked by talk of 'humanitarian obligations'. The public has been told that Major has been moved to act solely from bleeding-hearted concern for the plight of the Kurds. Ordinary British folk have been told they have to feel some sort of special moral responsibility for the situation.

For many reasons, this simply won't wash.

Civil wars, massacres and ensuing refugee problems have become routine throughout the Third World since the end of the European empires and the law and order that went with them. But nothing like the present aggressive intrusion into the sovereign territory of Iraq has ever before been thought necessary.

Chinese have slaughtered Tibetans and driven them from their homes. Pakistanis have done likewise to Bangladeshis, who then did likewise to their Bihari minority. Sri Lankan Sinhalese have attacked and displaced Tamils. Ethiopians have done the same to numerous minorities on their soil.

But never before has a single British or other western soldier been sent to set up a single 'safe haven' anywhere in the lands concerned — and quite rightly so. It is not for Britain or any other western country to take upon themselves the burden of the umpteen and one ethnic blood feuds constantly going on from one end of the Third World to the other.

HANDY FOR ISRAEL

But one player in the game will have reason to welcome a long-term western imbroglio in Iraq. Israel's leaders, along with those of the mightily powerful pro-Israel lobby everywhere in the West, are known to have been dissatisfied with the outcome of the Gulf War. One Israeli official has said: "It's failure if Saddam Hussein stays on." The intrusion of Anglo-American forces into Iraq, encouraging continuing revolt there as it will, may well help to bring down Saddam and even promote the Lebanon-style disintegration of the country. With western troops fighting its Arab enemies for it, nuclear-armed Israel would be left virtually the master of the Middle East.

Also, in the short term, preoccupation with the Kurds fleeing from Saddam would serve to distract western public opinion away from the similar plight of the Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank living under Yitzhak Shamir's reign of terror, whom Israel is now getting ready to drive from their homes and lands in much the same way.

Significantly, the Majors, Bushes and Mitterands, along with the media hacks, clergy and other professional moralisers who have agitated on behalf of the Kurds, are strangely silent about the Palestinians. No protected safe havens for them!

At the same time, the Kurds themselves seem to take a quite cynical view of the 'safe haven' plan. Izzidin Berwari, of the Kurdish Democratic Party, speaking in Damascus, said this was "not the required solution." Berwari seemed unconvinced by the pontificating Majors and their ilk, and to regard their action in Iraq as having ulterior motives slightly, if at all, connected with concern for the welfare of his people.

And Berwari is certainly right.

In the real world, no state ever acts out of humanitarian compassion towards foreign peoples. The moment any such state claims to be doing so it will always turn out that it is in fact serving some unspoken purpose that its leaders dare not admit to their own people. The present case is no exception.

ONLY THERE FOR CHARITY?

How grateful to us are the Kurds?

WHILST British servicemen are having their lives put on the line to defend the interests of the Kurds in Iraq (or so we are told), many of the latter's blood brothers whom our Government has allowed into Britain are busy stirring up mayhem in our streets.

In the latest of a long series of attacks in the area, the Iraqi Embassy in London was the scene of a four-hour siege last month when a gang of Kurdish self-styled 'protesters' stormed it, ransacking the building and hurling documents from the windows.

Armed police had to be called before the troublemakers were removed.

London residents now feel themselves constantly at risk from the way the Third World's feuds are regularly being brought to their streets.

It would seem that, considering all that Britain has been doing for their cause, these Kurds in our midst are showing us little gratitude, putting our people in danger and straining the resources of our already overworked police.

sums of international aid? We were. Who actually committed the European Community to discuss it? We did. Who produced the first plan? We did."

It will be noted that not a single one of the 'achievements' claimed by Mr. Major during his period of premiership so far related in any way to the problems of this country — the problems which, surely, are the ones to which he should be giving priority as Prime Minister of Great Britain!

A short time after this interview it was announced that British forces out in Iraq bringing protection and relief to the Kurds faced the danger of being blown up in Saddam Hussein's minefields. Surely, it is criminal for the lives of British servicemen to be risked in this way for any purpose other than those connected with the national security of the United Kingdom and its vital interests. Yet we are putting our soldiers to this risk supposedly just for the sake of the Kurds.

If we are to subject our troops to dangers of this sort, should it not be in a campaign to wipe out a real enemy of this country at home, namely the IRA. What the hell are British troops doing out in the Middle East while the Irish gunmen and bombers are still yet to be beaten?

This is not to say that this paper takes any pleasure over the present plight of the Kurds. We feel every sympathy with them — or at least the majority. The women, children and old folk are particularly to be pitied — though it must be said that some of the leaders of the Kurdish community are only paying the inevitable price for trying to stage an armed uprising in Iraq, and are responsible for getting their people into their present predicament.

But with Britain facing such huge problems at home we have a right to expect our Prime Minister and Government to be giving these problems priority.

So we say to Mr. Major and his ministers: "Never mind the Kurds; let's look after the Brits!"

UNEMPLOYMENT SET TO GO UP ANOTHER MILLION

Tory economic disaster continues

AFTER nearly 12 years of Mrs. Thatcher's 'economic miracle', unemployment is now set to soar by a further million to over 3 million in the next 18 months. That's the prediction of the Tories' City friends.

New Prime Minister John Major bears a heavy responsibility for this, as he was the last Chancellor of the Exchequer and a thoroughgoing Thatcher supporter.

Manufacturing output is sharply down, and the much vaunted service industries of the Thatcher era are nosediving as the recession deepens.

Figures recently released show a rapid drop in investment. Business bankruptcies are at record level. Unemployment figures are climbing steeply each month.

It all adds up to this: the Government has completely lost control over the economy, and the slump has picked up an unstoppable momentum which can only get worse.

The high interest rates that have led to many businesses going to the wall and many families losing their homes are to stay because of the Government's commitment to the EC and its exchange rate mechanism — which John Major, no less, took us into.

As the recession gets worse and business activity stagnates even further, more and more companies will go under, putting hundreds of thousands out of work — very likely another 500,000 by Christmas and double that by June 1992. Worse still, as the cost of Britain's continuing Middle Eastern operations mounts up, income tax and possibly VAT are bound to rise, squeezing everyone, and the economy itself, still further.

And there is no doubt that this recession will be worse than the one in 1980-82, when the unemployment figure touched 3½ million. The question is: how much worse? Indeed will it be as bad as the slump of the 1930s?

As just one symptom of the crisis, it was announced last month that Rolls Royce have placed a ban on all recruitment of new workers and are to cut their existing work force by 10 percent, axing 1,500 by Christmas of this year in a desperate struggle to survive. It could well be that RR will join the long list of great British companies to go to ruin or, at the best, be taken over by foreigners, as was Jaguar Motors a short time ago.

Rolls Royce, like Jaguar and so many others, would have few difficulties if only we had a government prepared to adopt a truly national policy and protect British manufacturing industry from the foreign goods invasion that has been welcomed by the Tory Government since the election of Mrs. Thatcher in 1979.

When the British National Party is finally victorious in this country it will see to it that these protective measures are taken. By these means, employment can again be found for the millions of jobless Britons reduced to despair under Thatcher, and now Major.

It will be Nationalism, not Toryism, that will put Britain back to work.

Big TV splash for BNP

THE BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY once again scored well in the publicity stakes last month. News reports from South East London have thrust the BNP back onto the box in the London regional news, where Richard Edmonds put the case for the party extremely well. The big boost, however, came from BBC1's Panorama. It's not often that the BNP can thank the Beeb, but this is one exception. The party got a very worthwhile 40 minutes from the programme, broadcast last month, in which Richard Edmonds again gave an outstanding performance that exuded the strength and confidence of the BNP.

The opposition immediately did us a favour when Malik Meir, a young Bangladeshi living in Stepney — who nearly killed Eastender Terry Swinney — boasted on the programme that ordinary Whites going into 'his area' will be stabbed. Equally bloodthirsty was Zionist Jew Mordechai Levy, with his maniacal staring eyes and dishevelled hair. This loon-like character claimed to be training British Jews in fire-arms training, saying: "We're going to kill the Nazis." Levy, like a few Japs before him, seems unaware that World War II has been over for 46 years.

Then there was the Asian woman who was shown arrogantly demanding that the BNP be banned — as if she and her kind were the new owners of Britain!

In another shot, an obviously Jewish 'plant' was featured claiming that he had attended a BNP meeting in Manchester at which plans had been discussed for attacking Jews and Jewish premises. Manchester BNP testified that this was a total lie, and the shifty, dishonest appearance of the man tended, in every facial gesture, to confirm it.

Thanks to the gaffe by the BBC showing the BNP's demented opposition, the party looked extremely good by comparison.

The result? Dozens of telephone enquiries from patriotic British people everywhere, keen to find out more about the British Party and what our young movement really stands for.

BETTER DAYS

This is a picture of the Motor Show at Earls Court in the 1950s. It will be noticed that the vast majority of names of makes on display are British. Those were days when most motorists in this country bought British cars. In recent times the British motor industry has been almost ruined by the policy of allowing unrestricted imports of motor vehicles into this country. For this policy the Tories are mainly to blame.

Tories hit poor

BRITAIN'S poorest families have been clobbered by the Tory budget. The hated poli tax may be on its way out but the poorest will pay for it through higher VAT. Tory newspapers said the switch 'delighted' Conservative MPs.

POLICE NOW RECRUITING QUEERS

GAYS AND LESBIANS are to be encouraged to join Britain's biggest police force, it was announced last month.

According to the Metropolitan Police, this is part of a policy of 'equal opportunity', "regardless of gender, colour or sexual orientation."

A similar policy has already been put into operation by South Yorkshire Police. And three months ago it was claimed that a Lesbian and Gay Police Association had more than 80 members from nine forces nationwide.

Although the fact will probably be denied by official spokesmen, it is virtually certain that the initiative for this move has come from the Government. The move is just one more sign of how degenerate Britain is becoming.

It now looks as if "Come with me to the station, Duckie" will become common parlance.

Gypsy the chimp fools art elite

IT HAD TO HAPPEN SOMETIME! A chimpanzee has made a laughing stock of the modern 'art' world by making daubings on a canvass and then having agents circulate her product among Britain's cultural elite, to big oohs and aahs of praise.

Gypsy the chimp is owned by a Swiss couple, Denyse and Werner Muller. Her painting was brought to London and shown to various art 'trendies'. One of these, self-styled art 'expert' Nicola Fyfe, was reported in the Daily Mail of April 4th as having "shivered with excitement" when she saw the picture.

"It's an Appel, Karel Appel," she exclaimed — the named painter being a founder member of the abstract impressionist Cobra group of artists. And the likely price? "We're talking of thousands," Miss Fyfe went on, pointing to an Appel picture valued at £100,000.

And so Gypsy's daubing went the rounds in London, exciting yet more 'connoisseurs'. Said one of them, Elena Guena, eyeing the monkey's splodge: "American art painted in the late fifties, early sixties." Actually, Gypsy produced the work sometime in the 1970s.

For a long time, British Nationalist has condemned abstract and other 'modern' art for what it is — degenerate junk fit only for the bonfire. Yet it is this art that has captivated a large part of Britain's intellectual establishment, who are apt to sneer at our condemnation as being 'fascist' or 'nazi' — a side-swipe at the Hitler Government in Germany, which strongly discouraged such excrescences. Well, Gypsy has spoken for us more convincingly than we could ever have done ourselves. She well and truly took the art snobs for a ride — just as others have done for the best part of a century.

GYPSY AT WORK
'Experts' drooled over her pictures

Loony leftie tipped for top BBC art post

THE B.B.C. doesn't change its spots. Last month it was confidently predicted in the papers that the corporation was likely soon to appoint Miss Janet Street-Porter to be its new head of TV arts programmes, at a salary of £80,000 a year.

This post would give Miss Street-Porter charge of, among other things, Omnibus, Arena and the Last Night of the Proms.

The move seems to be a response to a recent accusation by Miss Street-Porter that the BBC — the "masonic league of men in suits" — only pays lip service to 'equal opportunities'.

Miss Street-Porter is one of those loud-mouthed lefties who loves getting herself in the news with tilts at what she calls the 'establishment', notwithstanding that she is herself as 'establishment' as anyone, in conventional liberalistic terms. In one of her recent outbursts she said of the corporation: "Programmes are hosted by unattractive, sexist, middle-aged men," etc., etc., etc., ad nauseam.

Divorced from her third husband three years ago, she has of late shown a penchant for toyboys. The picture shown here of her with her latest, Norman, 20 years her junior, perhaps indicates one of the reasons why the Beeb seems to consider her the ideal person to supervise our diet of 'arts' on TV.

Crime and Race

HOW BIG IS THE COVER-UP?

THIS PAPER has long been in the forefront when it comes to exposing the cover-ups by the establishment and its mass media of some of the more unpleasant aspects of Britain's multi-racial new order. But all the same the truth still sometimes gets out in drips and drabs.

Just recently a number of striking official admissions have been forthcoming on the grim question concerning the connection between crime and race.

One such admission, straight from the horse's mouth, came in a report recently commissioned by the Home Office on the subject of rape. This acknowledged that almost one in six jailed rapists is of Afro-Caribbean origin.

There are at present 1,340 rapists in prison. Of these 214 are black — in other words, 16 per-cent.

This is a very large over-representation, since Afro-Caribbeans are said to make up no more than 2.28 per-cent of the population of this country as a whole.

Whites make up 75 per-cent of rapists. 6 per-cent are Indian, Pakistani or Bangladeshi and 3 per-cent are of other ethnic origin.

In other words, a quarter of all rapes for which the culprits have been imprisoned are now admitted to come from alien elements in Britain.

Says the report: "It is notable that when compared to the rest of the prison population rapists contain a much higher proportion of men of Afro-Caribbean origin."

GANG RAPES

The authors of the report interviewed 142 rapists in six prisons. Of these 32 (23 per-cent) were Afro-Caribbeans. Blacks, the report said, were more likely to take part in gang rapes, often carried out in cars after drinking, and involving "more gratuitous violence" than other rapes.

Further, more than half the victims of such rapes were white women. "Nearly three quarters of the group rapists were non-white, and more than half the group rapes were inter-racial."

Finally, "38 per-cent of serial rapists [those who commit more than one rape] were non-white, compared with 32 per-cent of the single rapists."

The report's co-author, US-born psychiatrist Dr. Don Grubin, said:-

"The race issue was clearly a significant finding. Afro-Caribbeans were more represented than we expected... Researchers like me are often warned off the subject of race. But it is a legitimate subject, we think."

What looks like a conspiracy of silence amounting almost to censorship has certainly been practised up until now by the Home Office, along with the other ruling powers in this country, as to the racial factors behind the growing wave of crime.

AMERICA'S EXPERIENCE

Just where this leads to is shown by the experience of America's nightmare multi-racial cities. Experienced New York Judge Burton Roberts recently remarked that there was great animosity between the different racial groups in the city, of which the brutal crime he routinely deals with in his court is a reflection. But a lot of people, he went on to say in his interview with Sunday Telegraph journalist Martyn Harris, "want to believe it doesn't exist at all."

One of such people to whom Harris spoke was Attorney Mike Gottlieb, described as a "classic New York Jewish liberal" — the very type making up most of the city's ruling establishment. Gottlieb spends his life defending dope-peddlers and inner-city hoodlums of all kinds. He professes to believe that the black and Hispanic thugs making up most of his clientele only behave as they do because, somehow or other, society, which his kind regards as 'racist' towards non-Whites, hasn't "given them a chance."

He recalled one such thug, who habitually walked around covered in gold chains "like the Queen opening parliament," and drove a $60,000 Mercedes. According to Gottlieb, this thug, who ran a heroin racket, was a "business genius" who would have graduated from Harvard if only he had had a different upbringing.

Such self-deception certainly does not serve to change any of the hideous facts of daily life for New Yorkers, in a city where it is dangerous to walk the streets or ride the subway because of the sheer numbers of muggings and murders.

Writes Martyn Harris: "There are no figures on the racial origin of criminals in New York City." The reason is that the very notion would "start a real political bonfire."

Meanwhile, he continues, just stop by the Bronx Supreme Court building any morning, and the truth is apparent at a glance. Four or five of the orange and blue correction vans park up with their loads of prisoners from Rikers Island and the Bronx House of Detention. Ten thousand felons a year are funnelled through here, which means around 200 today, shuffling through the loading bay with their cuffed hands and baleful, 'screw-you' glares — and every one of them black or brown."

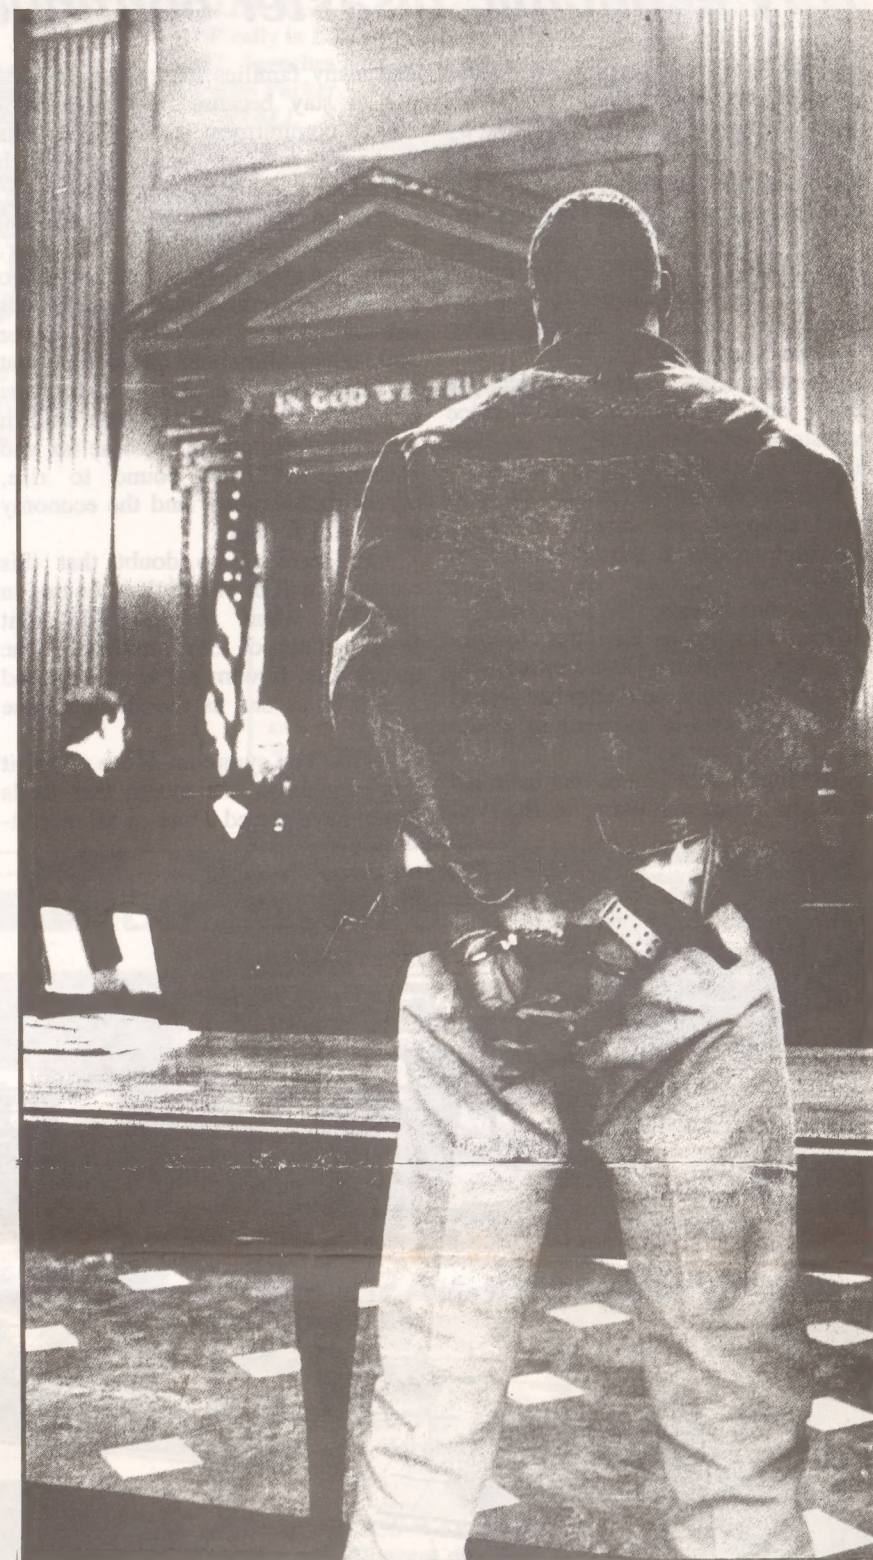

BRITAIN ON SLOPE

As we have previously pointed out in this paper, Britain is well and truly on the same slippery slope as the United States. Our cities are on the way to becoming like theirs.

Covering up the question as to the relationship between crime and race will not help solve London's, Birmingham's or Manchester's problems of collapsing law and order, any more than this has been the case in New York.

As things are, only one of our national newspapers saw fit to publish details of the Home Office report on race and rape. This was the Daily Mail, which buried the story on its inside pages despite its being what might be thought one of the most newsworthy items of the year.

Meanwhile, news has trickled out of another report, this time from Miss Vivien Stern, Director of NACRO — the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders. This was seemingly intended to show the treatment of ethnic minorities by the criminal justice system. It revealed that 16 per-cent of prisoners in England and Wales were from ethnic minorities. Most significantly, the report stated that black people were more prone to crime than white people.

A WORLDWIDE PROBLEM

Black over-representation in crime is not confined to Britain but is to be encountered in many countries, especially the United States. The picture here shows a young Negro appearing in court in New York City — a scene all too familiar to Americans.

If even liberals like Miss Stern now think it necessary to lift the veil of censorship this far, with admissions of this kind, then the question must arise whether the true situation has not perhaps already become much worse than anyone in the Government or media has been ready to acknowledge.

This in turn must lead us to wonder whether we have not been lied to on this, as on other racial issues, on a scale worthy of preglasnost Russia.

But be this as it may, the truth about the appalling consequences of the multi-racial society is now coming out, and nowhere are these consequences more glaringly revealed than in the breakdown of law and order. And once again British Nationalist has led the way.

Britain becoming Tom Tiddler's ground for whole world

LAST MONTH a case came to light which just served to demonstrate anew what a soft touch Britain has become for the whole world.

Mr. Abdul Motlib arrived here from Bangladesh with his wife and seven children. On leaving the airport, the family jumped into a taxi and proceeded to Bedford, where they presented themselves at the town hall and demanded a house.

The council gave them temporary accommodation, and then later gave them a flat. They have been told that they will eventually get a house.

And this, according to a report of the case which appeared in the Daily Star on April 25th, is no more than the Motlib family's entitlement.

But that is not all. Since the Motlib family arrived here all nine of them have been living off state benefits. Under the Social Security Acts, this also is their entitlement.

Just imagine a British family of similar size hopping on the plane to Bangladesh, and upon arrival expecting to be housed, fed and clothed by charity of the people of that country.

If the Bangladeshis allowed this, the world would regard them as mad, stark raving mad.

But this is exactly what we are doing in Britain. The case of the Motlib family is just one that has come to light. There are many more.

Like that of Mr. Peter Julian, who came here from Mauritius. His business went broke, leaving him with a £630,000 mortgage to pay on his house. The bill was picked up by the Department of Social Security!

And all this has happened in a Britain that has had a Conservative Government for 12 years — a Conservative Government which promised it would make Britain a more self-reliant society, as well as controlling immigration.

All we can say is that it serves people right for voting Tory!

Sharpton attacks BNP

BLACK AMERICAN RABBLE-ROUSER MAKES PARTY BOOKSHOP FIRST
TARGET ON LANDING IN U.K.

SATURDAY, the 27th April, was a day that saw black self-publicist and 'Black Power' preacher Al Sharpton launch the British wing of his 'Let's hate Whitey' campaign. Described by many of the papers here as the most odious man in America, Sharpton arrived in London to be greeted by Black Panther-style minders. There had been some media agitation to get him denied entry on the grounds that the clear purpose of his visit was to inflame black feelings in Britain's 'racially sensitive' areas and thus create a danger of renewed rioting. However, the Home Office, which last year barred white nationalist Manfred Roeder from Britain, declined to place the same bar on the 'Reverend' Sharpton.

Sharpton himself, despite his blackness, affects a 'white' hairstyle. He also eschews the dark suits of his 'Black Power' acolytes — mainly, it seems, because he is so grossly fat only to be able to wear black jump-suits. While ostentatiously identifying himself with the 'poor' and 'oppressed', he is known to drive about in expensive Mercedes cars and generally adopt an opulent lifestyle.

That Sharpton is a self-seeking self-publicist cannot be doubted. Before his arrival, and without checking his facts, he condemned the killing of "16-year-old Rodney Adams." Later he found out that it was 15-year-old Rolan Adams who had died. Winning no friends amongst the people, he condemned the British National Party as well as the Prime Minister and the Queen before leading a march past the BNP Bookshop in Welling. Outside the shop, the animal life (black and white) present on the march stopped to hurl abuse and missiles at the premises. Since the BNP had had the foresight to fortify the building strongly, no damage was sustained.

Nevertheless, as a result of Sharpton's attentions the event made national news on TV and radio and in the press. The newspapers' bias against Sharpton meant that media attention to his opposition to the BNP did the party no harm whatsoever!

On the day, many of the ordinary local people in Thamesmead, from where the march started, did in fact have to be restrained by the police from attacking the marchers, which in any event numbered a mere 250, despite an initial crowd at the assembly point of 400.

South Wales BNP regional meeting

DUE to difficulties in securing an appropriate venue, the BNP St. David's Day rally planned for Saturday, the 2nd March, had to be shelved; but an alternative meeting was held in Cardiff during the evening of the 1st March, at which East Midlands Organiser John Peacock was the guest speaker.

The meeting was the most successful event in Wales so far, particularly as most of the audience were young sympathisers only recently attracted to the British National Party.

The proceedings were chaired by South Wales Organiser Peter Fowler, who opened the meeting with an outline of BNP objectives.

In the forefront of these, he said, was something at first sight contrary to nationalist policy: the greatest export drive in Britain's history. To applause and laughter he added: "But you all know what we intend shipping out."

Cardiff Branch Chairman Tony Morgan then spoke, dealing with progress in the area and plans for the future.

John Peacock was welcomed with great enthusiasm. He presented the nationalist view of the Money Power's hidden international influence, citing the Gulf War as an example, and then moved on to refer to the prevailing economic recession and its implications for South Wales. In conclusion, he emphasised that the BNP was "the only hope for Britain's future."

After a period given over to questions and answers, an excellent collection was taken, and sales of literature and other printed propaganda were exceptionally good.

South Wales BNP is now receiving a flow of enquiries as a result of widespread leafletting and stickering.

A new and very active group has been formed in the Rhondda area, based at Tredegar and organised by Gareth Griffiths. Further units are shortly to be formed in other areas in the region.

London regional seminar and social

SATURDAY, April 6th saw another in the series of BNP election seminars across the country, this time in London.

The serious business of preparing to fight the next general election is well under way, and the seminar chairman, David Bruce, opened the meeting to address leading activists and organisers in London and the Home Counties. The current political situation, he said, is in a state of flux, and great changes are taking place.

Director of Propaganda Tony Wells spoke next, to make three points: first to outline the BNP's election strategy, which is to make a maximum effort in a few selected seats; second, that the electoral climate is now definitely changing and that the votes nationalism lost to the Tories in 1979 are again up for grabs; third, that following the election the BNP, which has made all the running for nationalism over the past two years, will have a big responsibility as virtually the sole nationalist standard-bearer in Britain.

South London Organiser Richard Edmonds stressed the importance of getting the party's propaganda out to the people and outlined the ways in which this can be done. The urgency of making a real effort, of concentrating resources and manpower and getting our propaganda out en masse — in tens of thousands — was heavily emphasised. Mr. Edmonds also spoke of canvassing and of the response of ordinary folk to our message, which was very encouraging.

National Elections Officer Eddy Butler then spoke in detail about the BNP's election strategy and the importance of last year's council elections in Tower Hamlets. A vital task is to communicate with local people on a level they can understand — a level which deals with local issues. Canvassing is a crucial factor in this; it is not enough any more for BNP branches to confine themselves to leafletting alone — BNP activists have to speak to local people on their own doorsteps for all sorts of reasons: to find out what they are thinking and what are the issues they care about; and to make our presence felt as individuals by letting the people see us, breaking down any preconceptions they may have of us as a result of media propaganda. After all, BNP party workers are for the most part likeable people, and that impression will come through on the doorstep, he said.

Party Chairman John Tyndall rounded off the seminar saying that, as the political climate turns in our favour, elections will take a bigger priority for the party. When the breakthrough comes, as come it will, the BNP must be ready to capitalise on it and explode onto the national scene as never before.

THE SOCIAL

Following the London seminar, there was a very successful social in the East End.

On the night, about seventy people, paying £8 a head, heard veteran Dutch nationalist Florentine Rost van Tonningen speak of her and her husband's experiences during and after the Second World War. BNP members said afterwards that they were deeply moved.

The surroundings for the occasion were of excellent quality and the ample food was excellent too. Thanks are due to Sue and Judy for all the hard work put in to make the event the success it was. Another crowd-pleaser was the extremely cheap drink provided for the event, with the beer at just 80p a pint and shorts also suitably discounted.

All profits went to the Tower Hamlets BNP Election Fund, needed to fight two seats in the general election.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — I was amused to read in the newspapers that Denis Healey, the veteran leftist and ex-communist, has been made an Honorary Freeman of Leeds "in recognition of his 39 years as the Member for Leeds East."

Those who seriously believe that Healey has been honoured for this reason need to think again.

In reality, Healey is now getting his rewards for his lifetime of service to internationalism, to the world bankers and to the multi-racial one-world order — not for anything he has done for the people of Leeds.

Very likely, the next step is that he will be elevated to the peerage.

I look forward to the day when enemies of the nation like Healey are well and truly brought to justice.

ANDREW LIGHTFOOT
Bridlington, Yorks.

Sir, — The way violent crime is spreading throughout our country it will not be long before the example of Redbridge BNP's anti-crime patrol will need to be copied in even the most rural parts. At the beginning of last year I was getting off a train in my home town, which in the past has been only little affected by the problems that grip the inner cities, when a young lady approached me and asked if I would mind walking her along a deserted path. On the way she told me of how, only around 6 o'clock the previous evening, she had been threatened by a gang of thugs who then snatched her handbag. If there was a body of young British men like those of the Redbridge BNP patrolling the streets of every area of the UK, the kind of cowardly attacks on defenceless people like the one I have described would drop dramatically.

MARK RUNS FOR US

A report on the London Marathon, by TONY WELLS

EAST LONDON BNP activist Mark Twiddy ran the 26.2 miles of the London marathon on Sunday, the 21st April.

Mark, a marathon runner for the first time, completed the course in just under 4½ hours. However, but for a mishap in training just two weeks before the race he would have easily finished in under four hours.

As a personal test, a marathon is as gruelling as can be found anywhere, and Mark can be justifiably proud of completing the course — an outstanding personal achievement.

The day started early for him at 5.30 a.m., before I joined him at his home at 7 o'clock. Then Mark saw his Marathon T-shirt for the first time. It said simply: 'BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY — 081 316 4721'. Mark was to run the entire course advertising the BNP!

The journey to Blackheath, one of the three starting points for the Marathon, went smoothly, all the anxieties and worries gradually receding.

At 9.30 a.m. at Blackheath a roar went up signalling the start of the race. At the front of 20,000 'Blue Start' athletes, the first runners moved off. Perhaps four or five minutes elapsed before Mark could even walk forward! Then, after another minute or two, he was jogging past hundreds of spectators, race officials and policemen lining the route.

After four miles, the three starts — red, green and blue — converged. As Mark ran up Shooters Hill three youngsters lining the route spotted his BNP T-shirt and ran over to shake him by the hand and congratulate him. This natural spontaneous response delighted Mark and buoyed him up for the next few miles — past Woolwich Ferry, where his T-shirt got huge cheers from the ordinary folk lining the route, and around the Cutty Sark at Greenwich (six miles along the course) giving us a great reminder of Britain's glorious past.

Then it was on through Rotherhithe, with local BNP members yelling their encouragement, before Mark passed through Bermondsey, a BNP stronghold. At this point he received a real morale-booster, as TV cameras covering the race took shots to the backdrop of a huge Benetton billboard (you know, the multi-racial one showing black, white and Chinese kids together) — only this particular billboard happened to be plastered with BNP posters saying "Tomorrow belongs to us!"

Next came Tower Bridge (12 miles along the course). Then it was on through the BNP heartland of the East End: down Commercial Road and the East India Dock Road and around the Isle of Dogs, cheered on all the way by local BNP supporters before passing back under Tower Bridge with just four miles to go.

Seen on TV jogging past sports presenter Bob Wilson, Mark got his second wind at 20 miles — which was when he knew that he was going to make it!

After running under Tower Bridge to more shouts of encouragement, Mark ran past another four bridges, taking them all in his stride. London Bridge, Southwark Bridge, Blackfriars Bridge and Waterloo Bridge were all left behind as Mark passed down The Strand, through Trafalgar Square, down The Mall and around St. James Park before jogging past the Houses of Parliament and crossing Westminster Bridge to the finishing line in just 4 hours and 22 minutes.

A jubilant Mark Twiddy had run his first Marathon past half a million spectators, giving a great advert for the BNP. In the process he raised several hundreds of pounds for the party's General Election Fund. The Marathon medal Mark collected was richly deserved, and he warrants the highest praise and the thanks of all of us for his excellent effort. Thanks are also due to everyone who sponsored Mark for the event.

For Mark to run the Marathon for the BNP took a lot of guts. If you were not among those who sponsored him before the race, but would now like to make a donation in recognition of his achievement, send your money to: 'BNP Marathon', PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

SHARPTON ATTACKS B.N.P.

As this report goes to press, we hear that Sharpton has plans to tour the country, making a nuisance of himself in racial hotspots all over Britain. BNP units should demonstrate and picket wherever this odious specimen appears. He draws publicity like a magnet, and it is up to our units to get a slice of this and tell the media and our people: "Al Sharpton is another import we can do without — kick him out!"

REPORT BY TONY WELLS

BNP comes to Rochdale

COUNCILLORS AND 'RENTAMOB' FAIL TO STOP RALLY

VERY OFTEN, when the British National Party goes to hold a public meeting in some area of Britain, at least as much is demonstrated by local opposition to the meeting as by the meeting itself. Rochdale last month was a case in point.

The BNP announced that it planned to hold a rally on April 27th in the town in support of Ken Henderson, who was standing as the party's candidate in the Smallbridge & Wardleworth ward in this month's elections to the Borough Council. Immediately this was known, hysteria burst forth.

The leader of the Liberal Democrats on the Council, Mr. Paul Rowen, was heard screaming that the rally should be banned because, he said, it was "a provocation which would cause public disorder."

Now this really was interesting. Isn't 'Liberal Democracy' supposed to be all about the right of people of different political views to express their opinions? Yet here we have a so-called 'Liberal Democrat' agitating that the BNP should be denied that right. As for the 'public disorder' to which Mr. Rowen referred, he knew as well as we did that any such disorder that occurred would be caused by the BNP's opponents. It seems then that this 'Liberal Democrat' also feels that if people threaten violence against a political meeting it is the meeting that should be banned rather than those who threaten the violence against it. Thank you, Councillor Rowen, for revealing to us the true face of 'Liberal Democracy', as distinct from the 'tolerant', 'caring' and 'moderate' one that it usually likes to present to the public!

Mr. Rowen's sentiments, apparently, were not just his own; they were echoed by his deputy on the Council, Mr. Norman Smith, who said: "I would hope that the police would step in and halt any meeting."

When the application for a meeting hall was put in to the Council by the BNP, the former did everything possible to obstruct it by delaying tactics, and eventually it took the threat of a high court action by the party to ensure that the booking went ahead. A Council representative admitted openly that the delay had been caused by the Council's reluctance to accept the application. 'Democracy' again!

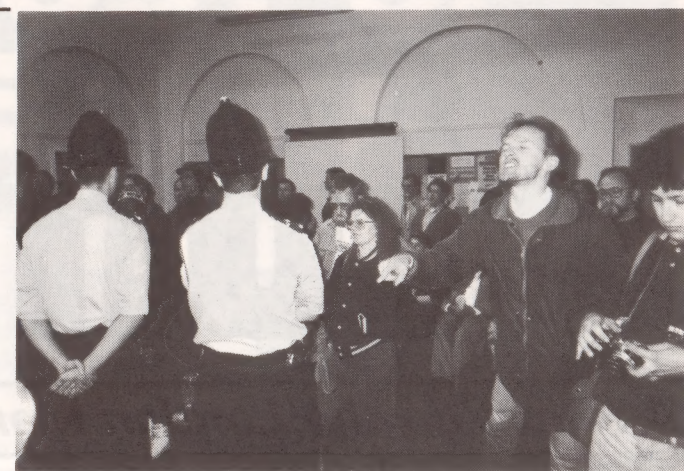

GREETED BY FREAKS

On the day, a BNP party of about 100 arrived for the event. Confronting it was the customary animal menagerie of 'Rentamob', an assortment of left-wing freaks of the kind that never fail to appear whenever the party manifests itself in public. It is funny how, wherever in the country the BNP goes, the mob displays a uniform filthiness and scruffiness, and another feature in addition to that: it never comes to argue, to debate or to reason, but always solely to let forth a non-stop cacophony of zoological noises aimed at preventing the voices of the BNP speakers being heard. It acted true to form at Rochdale.

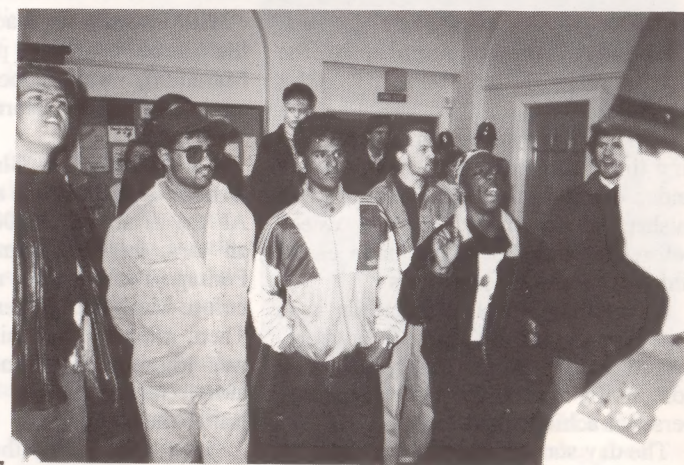

BNP Chairman John Tyndall, at the meeting to speak in support of Ken Henderson, asked the police at the beginning to allow the BNP to exercise its right under the Public Order Act to have its own stewards remove the mobsters immediately they tried to disrupt the meeting, but this was refused. It was insisted that the police do the job. In the event, the officer in charge lamentably failed in his responsibilities—in this regard, and the 'Rentamob' crowd were permitted to remain in the hall for a long time after they had made it abundantly clear, by means of their non-stop chanting, that they were only there to wreck the meeting, and after BNP officials had twice requested their removal.

Eventually, Mr. Tyndall interrupted his speech to call publicly on this police officer to remove the mob—asking him: was he prepared to do his job or did he want the BNP stewards to do it for him? As these stewards moved forward in purposeful manner, the officer finally and belatedly did as he should have done much earlier and induced the reds to leave. Order was restored and the meeting proceeded to a highly successful conclusion—candidate Ken Henderson having earlier made an excellent maiden public speech despite the rowdiness of the opposition in trying to shout him.

The Rochdale rally made big publicity, both before and after the event, and its success will have contributed greatly to the resurgence of the BNP in Lancashire after a period of a year or two in which party activity there has lagged behind other regions.

Reds greatly upset in Dundee

FOLLOWING the establishment of firm bases in Glasgow and Edinburgh, the British National Party in Scotland is now stepping up its activity in Dundee. As a token of how worried opponents now are about the BNP presence in the Tayside area, local left-wingers recently staged an 'anti-fascist' meeting in the city with the object of whipping up anti-BNP feeling.

Local BNP Organiser Gareth Norman decided to go along to the meeting, accompanied by two colleagues, to present the BNP point of view. The 'anti-fascists', however, were not interested in having a reasoned discussion; as soon as the three BNP men arrived and were recognised they were set upon by a mob of about 50. Gareth Norman, who showed great courage in the encounter, was attacked from behind (he is a big fellow and few opponents would have the guts to come at him frontally) and received a nasty scalp wound which required six stitches. The BNP men stoutly held their ground against overwhelming odds until very welcome reinforcements arrived in the form of a squad of some 30 young pro-BNP men who had been mustered by local activist Scott Forbes. Confronted with this challenge, the reds quickly bolted.

On the following weekend the reds descended on the city centre to put out anti-BNP literature, while one group of them went to Gareth Norman's place of work and threatened him that he would be 'wasted'. Once again, however, a large number of pro-BNP 'auxiliaries' (not actual members but sympathisers ready to defend the party if it is under attack) materialised, this time about 100 strong, and quickly saw the reds out of the area.

The actual number of enrolled members the BNP has in Dundee is as yet still small but, as these events indicate, its circle of supporters is now considerable. This is clearly worrying the reds frantic. Hence their anti-BNP campaign in the city—a campaign in support of which, apparently, they have enlisted a number of thugs from Glasgow.

Whatever the opposition may do, however, it is certain that—as elsewhere—their efforts to smash the BNP will fail!
